

Yale University
2023 Long-Service Recognition

FROM THE PRESIDENT

Dear Honorees,

It is my privilege to continue the tradition of Yale's annual Long-Service Recognition, now in its twenty-seventh year, as we honor the talented and devoted employees who are celebrating milestone anniversaries at Yale. We are proud to recognize the efforts of 323 Yale staff members who have made the university a welcoming and excellent community.

Over the years, you have demonstrated collegiality, dedication, generosity, and innovative thinking. Collectively, you have contributed 9,560 years to the university. This includes 148 of you who are marking twenty-five years of service and eighty-five who are celebrating thirty-year milestones. Sixty-four of our colleagues have been here for thirty-five years, and twenty-two of you have devoted four decades to Yale. Three of you have reached the forty-five-year career milestone, and one colleague has been at Yale for half a century. I commend you all on your remarkable tenures. Each day, I am reminded of the commitment and expertise of our staff, who are the lifeblood of Yale. In your different roles – assistants, chefs, coaches, custodians, directors, groundskeepers, librarians, managers, police officers, researchers, and more – you help us realize Yale's mission: to improve the world today and for future generations through outstanding research and scholarship, education, preservation, and practice.

Together, we have achieved great things in the decades during which you have worked here, and together we will continue to advance Yale's mission in the years to come. On behalf of university leaders and our colleagues across campus, thank you and congratulations!

Sincerely,

Peter Salovey

President, Yale University

Yale University Art Gallery

When Pat holds a piece of early American silver or gently opens the top of a Wethersfield chest with drawers (at right), she often knows instantly where and when the objects were made and by whom. Her renowned connoisseurship is over five decades in the making and is at the heart of her role as the Friends of American Arts Curator of American Decorative Arts at the Yale University Art Gallery. Pat has been at Yale since 1968 when she joined as an assistant curator after receiving her M.A. in Early American Culture from the University of Delaware, Winterthur Program. She became a curator in 1978 and received her Ph.D. from Yale in 1987.

Known for her scholarship – “one that is thorough and astonishingly free of ego or artifice,” says Antiques and Arts Weekly – Pat is the author of or contributor to nine books. Notable among them are Colonial Massachusetts Silversmiths and Jewelers and Art and Industry in Early America: Rhode Island Furniture 1650–1830. The latter received the Historic New England Book Prize and the Decorative Arts Society’s Charles F. Montgomery Prize. It accompanied an Art Gallery exhibition in 2016–2017 and is the foundation of the Rhode Island Furniture Archives, a digital resource that grows every year and promises to provide information to scholars for decades to come.

Pat grew up in Bridgeport and later West Hartford, Connecticut. When she was a teenager, her parents took her and her brother on family outings to the local art museum. Pat imagined working in those spaces someday. Then, for three college summers, she was an intern at the Connecticut Historical Society (CHS), numbering historical objects, cleaning ironwork flooded by Hurricane Carol in 1955, and processing a large collection of unidentified copperplate printed textiles. With the help of Victoria and Albert Museum brochures, she found it “gratifying to be able to give the objects some kind of identity.”

Noticing her work, the CHS director encouraged Pat to apply to the Winterthur Program. She was accepted as one of eight fellows who had museum privileges that included handling the pieces. Pat hoped to make textiles the subject of her master’s thesis, but Winterthur’s textile curator was unable to be her advisor. When she discussed this with inaugural program director Charles F. Montgomery, he convinced her to write about seventeenth century Connecticut Valley furniture. “To this day,” says Pat, “I thank him for that suggestion and my ability to read very difficult seventeenth-century documents.”

This facility with early American script did not stop Pat from becoming fluent in modernism. When she arrived at Yale much of the decorative arts collection had been assembled by 20th century collector Francis P. Garvan who gave it in honor of his wife Mabel Brady Garvan. Since then, the holdings have doubled, and include an embrace of modern design: John C. Waddell's gift of more than 150 objects designed between 1925 and 1940; the Swid Powell design collection of 1,500 innovative ceramics, silver, glass, preparatory sketches and prototypes; a trove of contemporary turned wood. In conjunction with new acquisitions and old, Pat has organized noteworthy exhibitions and contributed to their publications. Her accomplishments have been touted by the Wunsch Americana Foundation with its inaugural annual award in 2013, and the Antique Dealers' Association of America's award of merit in 2017.

Pat has also played a key role in raising funds to endow her department, and when she steps down her position will be named Patricia E. Kane Curator of American Decorative Arts. Over the years, she has mentored graduate students and Marcia Brady Tucker Fellows who have gone on to top curatorial roles in American museums. "I think one of the most inspiring things about Yale," says Pat, "is that you're constantly working with young people. And they are always thinking in ways that compel you, almost through osmosis, to look at things differently, to keep in touch with the world, and to keep learning."

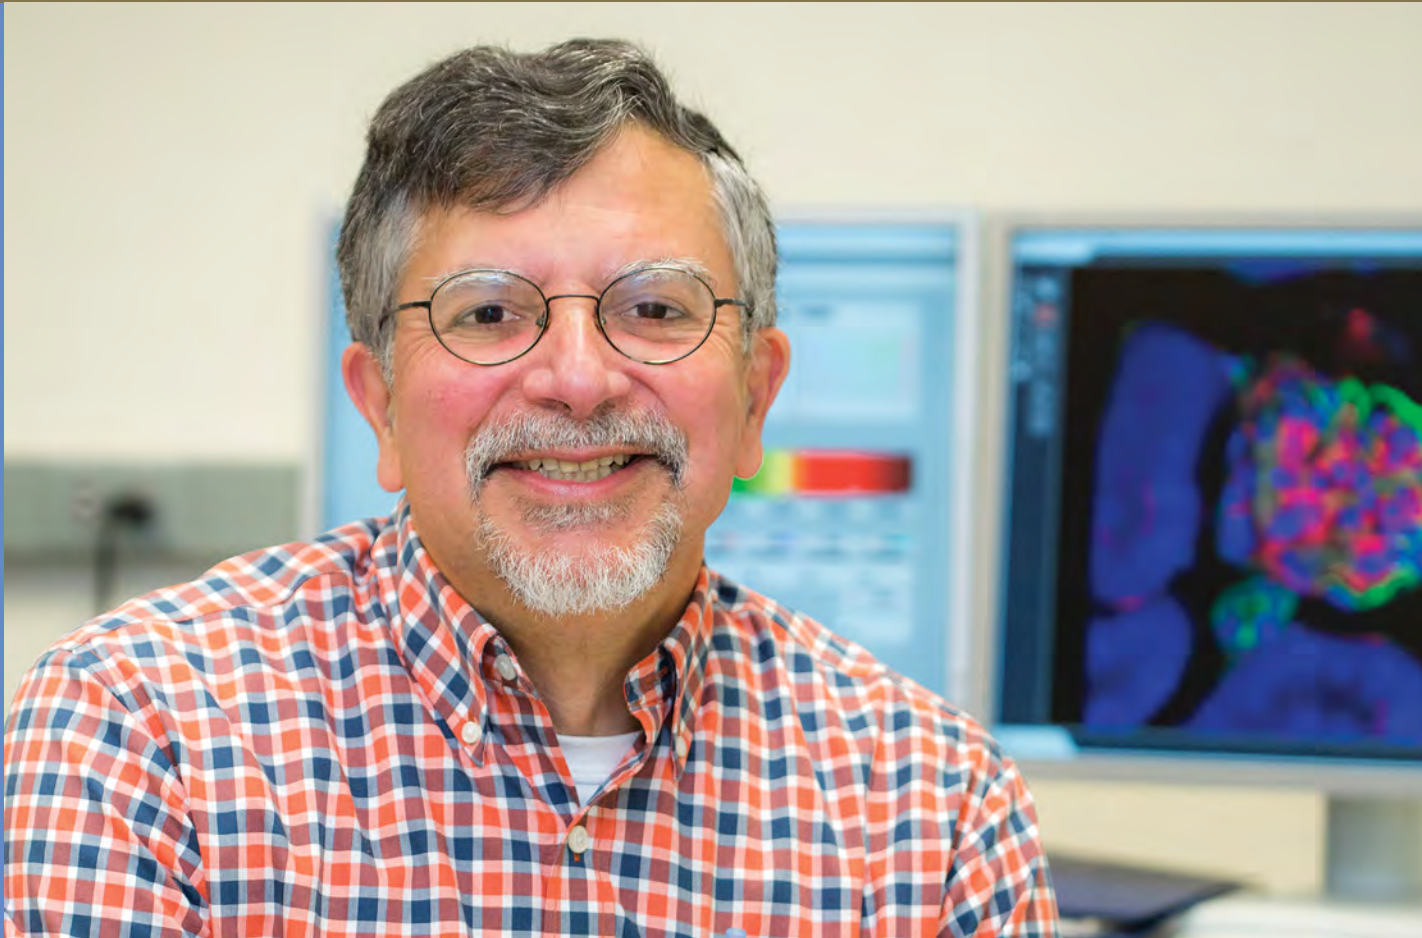

Pat Kane examines silver at the First Parish Church, Quincy, Massachusetts, in 1978, the year she became curator of American Decorative Arts at the Yale Art Gallery.

Thomas Ardito Pathology

It all started for Research Associate Thomas Ardito in sixth grade when he was introduced to the microscope. In time, with a biology degree in hand, Tom joined Yale as a lab technician. Graduate and on-the-job education gave him further momentum and he began working with kidney-research pioneer Michael Kashgarian, MD, FASN. Under his mentorship, Tom became a skilled and well-known imaging and microscopy expert whose technical knowledge broadened to include fluorescent and confocal (laser) microscopy. He eventually managed five microscopes in the Pathology, Physiology, and Internal Medicine departments. Today, Tom wears two hats – one as a diagnostician who analyzes renal biopsies and the other as a teacher who trains staff and faculty on the Stem Cell Center’s microscopes. This work makes him feel like he is “accomplishing something every day by helping people.” A self-described “technical geek,” Tom says his fascination with “instrumentation” has not waned since that day in grammar school.

Cathy Vellucci Faculty of Arts and Sciences

“I’ve had so many opportunities here at Yale,” says Cathy—from the beginning of her career as an accounting clerk in the School of Medicine business office, through finance-focused positions in medical school departments like diagnostic radiology and neurosurgery, to Human Resources and Faculty of Arts and Sciences on central campus. She is especially proud of shepherding into existence the C&T Summer Training Program; she fondly remembers the night she and several colleagues received The President’s Award (now the Linda K. Lorimer Award) for developing the program. “It was a grassroots effort at the time,” says Cathy, “and I’ve always wanted to make a difference in a positive way.” Making a difference on an individual level drove Cathy’s work as a senior director with Belonging at Yale. It is the reason she began rescuing collies. The executive director of Collie Rescue League of New England, Cathy looks forward to pursuing that “labor of love” when she retires in June.

PROJECT COORDINATOR Ashley Blackwell

The annual Yale University Long-Service Recognition commemorative book is an Internal Communications presentation led by Lalani Perry, Assistant Vice President, and Brenda Naegel, Director, Recognition & Engagement. Special thanks to Kymiia Mood, Senior Communications Assistant, who also worked on the project. Each year the university recognizes staff members who celebrate 25 years of service to Yale and each five-year anniversary thereafter.

 This publication is printed with soy inks on paper that is comprised of 30% post-consumer waste.
